

I wanted to make it known that I object to anything that would weaken the Indiana Telephone Privacy Law. I no longer need to worry about who my children are speaking with on the phone. I was getting at least two calls a night wanting me to buy something, but since the above-mentioned law was enacted, I might get one telemarketing call a week. I don't want phone calls interrupting my precious time with my children, unless I initiate them. I don't want to be asked to buy more services I don't need from someone I already deal with - if I want additional services, I can and will seek out a supplier, preferably one I already am acquainted with. It is truly pitiful that I have to tell people NOT to call me. Now that they don't, it is even more pathetic that I have to reaffirm that desire with you.

Please, leave Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law alone! Can you honestly say you enjoy getting telemarketing calls?

Sincerely,

Debra Burroughs
